Four Corners ABC TV
Australia's Shame

Over 10 weeks, Four Corners researchers, producers and journalists worked relentlessly to examine and expose the treatment of young people – mainly indigenous – in custody. Their work culminated in revelations of systemic brutalisation and torture and the establishment by the Federal Government of a Royal Commission within hours of broadcast.

Four Corners prevailed over huge logistical challenges to broadcast, finding many of the boys involved, exclusively interviewing them on camera. Many of these traumatised children live in remote locations without phones or internet, making these efforts all the more impressive.
